Waterford, Ireland

Chapman, William(?)

September 28, 1889

[to his cousin, Henry Chapman, Jr.]

[Acknowledges his trip to Europe, but wishes he would have visited them in Waterford, Ireland.]

Letter only.

[I am glad to say I think John is decidedly better than he was, and we hope after wintering in the South of France he will be beckoned(?) to health again...]

Dear Harry

We often wondered what had become of you or whether you had ever come over to Europe at all, as we had not heard from you. It is a pity you did not leave yourself time to come to Waterford. We planned all have been glad to see you.

I hope you had a successful trip this time.

I am glad to say I think John is decidedly stronger and better than he was, and we hope after wintering in the South of France he will be restored to health again. he has a good appetite and keeps up his spirits wonderfully

Your mother seems to be a long time ill. the last time Edward spoke of her he said she was getting better, I hope she will soon be altogether again.

How is Uncle Henry & Hudson?

This is my busy evening so I have not time to write a long letter. so I must conclude.

Wishing you a safe & pleasant voyage

I am

Yr affty Cousin

J W Chapman
